 the lesson was over before any one noticed Bill had had no book anyway being advised to share with a boy in a pink shirt who kept his elbow firmly between Bill and the book. When the bell rang Bill grabbed the boy in the pink shirt before he could leave.
 However, by the end of the day he had decided that this school was better than the last one even though he didn't like it. Nobody had offered to pull his head off, rip his coat or throw his shoes over the roof.
 on the other hand, nobody had spoken to him either.
 By Thursday after noon, nothing had changed Bill was not entirely surprised no one spoke to him because no one knew he was there every day he was in another group. He only saw his class together at registration after that they were split up for all their lessons.
